> OBITUARY. Professor William Dressler.

William Dressier, professor of mu-sic, died in New York city, on the morning of July 1st, in his eightymorning of July 1st, in his eightyeighth year.

William Dressler was one of the last of the old school of American musicians, born in Nottingham, England, of German parents, in 1826. He was graduated from the Cologne conservatory of music in 1847. His father was court fluitist to the King of Saxony. When a young man William Dressler played first violin at the opera house in Weisbaden, where he was afterwards conductor. Coming to America in the early fifties, he traveled through the United States and Canada as solo pianist and accompanist with Ole Bull. In those days he was an intimate friend and associate of Richard Hoffman, S. B. Mills, Geo.

W. Morgan and Theodore Thomas.

After traveling several seasons in concept commaniss Mr. Dressler with the season of the seventh and eighth section.

After traveling several seasons in concert companies Mr. Dressler set-ded in New York, devoting his time to composing, playing church organs, accompanying well known artists and teaching. In his day he was the lead-ing accompanist, and was in constant demand.

His first prominent church position was, as organist and choirmaster of the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian church, of which the Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby was pastor. Other churches where he played at different times were St. Charles Borromeo's and St. Peter's Roman Catholic, Brooklyn, and St. Peter's Roman Catholic, Jersey City, being at the last named for eighteen years. His work in the Catholic churchs led him to compose and arrange much music for that serand arrange much music for that serand arrange much music for that service, which compositions have been used extensively throughout the world. He was, for many years, musical editor for the then well known houses of William Hall and Son and J. L. Peters. Of late years he has devoted himself to composition.

Sergeant A. C. Mathews and ficer Henry Fenton discovered a fire about 12:30 o'clock Friday evening in the building on Commerce street formerly occupied by the late A. N. Carpenter. An alarm was rung in from box 16, corner of Main and Market streets. The fire was located up on the third story of the building near the front in a large packing box that was filled with various articles. It contained cartons of matches, macaroni, dried fish, onions, starch and other articles and is owned by Frank Malozzie, who used to keep a store on Franklin street and had placed the box there for storage.
